ARCELORMITTAL CLEVELAND

Our City is extremely fortunate to have many businesses and organizations that are committed to being part of the community, playing an integral role in improving the quality of life in our neighborhoods.

Since its beginning, Cleveland's steel industry has been inextricably linked to community. As employees and their families, many immigrating to the area for work, settled in clusters near the mills over the decades, new neighborhoods were born.

A century later, ArcelorMittal Cleveland remains closely tied with these neighborhoods and the surrounding city and region. Last year, ArcelorMittal provided nearly $750,000 to local programs focused on health and safety, education and the environment, working with community partners to provide safe after-school opportunities for youth, improve science and math education, protect and restore waterways, greenspace and natural habitats, and more. The Cleveland facility's 1,800+ employees multiply this impact by generously donating their time and dollars.

For the past seven years, ArcelorMittal has supported the City of Cleveland's gun buy-back program, and more than 1,300 weapons have been collected. The program is a natural extension of the company's internal commitment to health and safety. An example of true partnership, ArcelorMittal also melts and recycles the collected guns at its steelmaking shop, transforming something that could be used for violence into new steel that will eventually become a car, washing machine or other consumer good.

Tonight, the Cleveland Police Foundation is proud to recognize ArcelorMittal Cleveland for its efforts and commitment to making our community safer.
